CAKING, vbl. sb. Yks. Der. Shr.

1. Obsol. A sort of gaming party, which the cottagers sometimes got up as a speculation. See below.

Shr. Between harvest-time and Christmas a woman who proposed to have a 'caking' made a batch of small cakes from the produce of her 'leasings' [gleanings] and invited the neighbouring farm-servants to play cards for these cakes which she sold to them. She bought in the 'lost' cakes at the rate of three for twopence, and resold them at the original price, one penny, to the losers. She sometimes realized 8 or 10 shillings, and then considered herself to have had 'a right good cakin'.' The practice of 'caking' is now [1871] fast dying out, BURNE Flk-Lore (1883) 473.

2. In phr. to go a-caking, the custom on All Saints' Day of poor women and children begging for cakes at the houses of the well-to-do.

Der.¹ They cry—'A cake, a cake, for All Souls' sake.' House-keepers formerly baked small loaves for the children, and [some] somewhat larger for the mothers; but at present this dole, to save trouble, is given in money.

3. Comp. Caking-day, Nov. 2, All Souls' Day; also St. Thomas' Day, when children go round begging for cakes.

1. sb. A perpendicular declivity, a rise like a step, esp. a step-like projection in a coal-pit.

N.Cy.¹ Nhb.¹ There is a string of canches from the Willows to the glass-houses on Blaydon Haugh, the river winding about those canches like a mill race, Newc. Dy. Chron. (Aug. 23, 1887). In a thin seam of coal it is necessary to work either an upper or lower stratum of stone along with the coal, to give height to the passage way. The coal being worked first, leaves a steep-like projection of stone. This is a canch. Coal and stone are thus worked away alternately. Where a slight fault or slip occurs in a bed of coal, the dislocation leaves one part of the seam above the other, the step thus formed being a canch. A top canch is also called a broo. Nhb., Dur. NICHOLSON Coal Tr. Gl. (1888); (J.H.B.) Dur. GIBSON Up-Weardale Gl. (1870); The term is applied more particularly when it is desired to describe the thickness of the strata which is removed—as a 13 inch kauch (J.J.B.). ne.Yks.¹

CAPIE-HOLE, sb. Sc. Also in form kypie. A game of marbles, in which the object is to throw a marble into a hole. Cf. capey-dykey.

Sc. A hole is made in the ground, and a certain line drawn, called a strand, behind which the players must take their stations. The object is, at this distance, to throw the bowl into the hole. He who does this most freq. wins the game. It is now more gen. called 'the Hole,' but the old designation is not yet quite extinct (JAM.). Bnff. Still played under the name of kypie-hole. A paper cap is placed over the hole (W.C.). Abd. The bool game of 'kypie' is played from a 'stance' about 12 feet from the kype or hole. The first player tries to hit one of his neighbours' bools, removing it a foot from its place. He then proceeds to hit any other, each hit being carefully noted, or he may play into the kype and hit them over again: if he miss the kype, two begins to play, hitting as many as he can. The boy whose marble gets hit six times leaves the game (G.W.). Ags. Three holes are made at equal distances. He who can first strike his bowl into each of these holes, thrice in succession, wins the game. It is called 'capie-hole,' or by abbreviation 'capie' (JAM.).

CAPPUN, see Captain.

CAPPY, *sb.*¹ Nhb. War. In form cap-it War.² [ka'pi.] A variety of the boys' game of leap-frog or pitchback. See below.

Nhb.¹ One stoops or gives 'a back,' on which a cap is laid; the players vault over, as in leap frog, each one resting his hands on the cap as he leaps. The one who first causes the cap to fall must exchange places with the boy who is 'making a back.' War.² The first leaper places a cap on the back of the player 'down,' whilst going over, and the last leaper takes it from the back (or failing to do so, is 'down'). The first leaper now puts the cap lightly on the front of his own head, so that it may fall in so favourable a position—when he pitches—that he may take it in his teeth, and cast it over his head, across the back of the one down, to taw. Should it fall between the leaper and the one down, the former must make the back.

1. sb. A kind of comb for dressing wool, made of wires set in leather.

Nrf. Like a caird for teasing woo', BARR Poems (1861) 33. Nhb.¹ w.Yks.² Mirfield was a great place for the manufacture of hand-made cards formerly. In driving through that village during 1840-44, the traveller would notice numbers of women sitting on the doorsteps of the cottages with long perforated straps of leather across their knees, into which they stuck with great accuracy wires bent for the purpose. Shr.¹ The [ki'ar-'dz] were two flat boards, each of which was about eleven inches long by seven broad; they were covered with leather, full of teeth—bent, flexible wires set closely together. Each card had a handle in the centre of the long side. When the cards were in use the handles were at opposite points to each other. The modus operandi of the cards was this,—the carder laying them on her knee, with the wool or 'herdes' between them, held the lower one firmly by the handle with her left hand; then taking the handle of the upper one in her right hand, she worked the card towards her, repeating the process until the material undergoing it required turning or removing, when she reversed the movement, and drove it off the cards in thick rolls. The teeth, or wires of the cards for 'herdes,' or nogs, were farther apart than those in the wool-cards. 'My 'onds bin that sore ööth cardin' nogs, I'm sick o' the sight of a par o' cards.'

2. v. To comb or dress wool, to mingle as warp and woof; also fig.

CARLIN(G)S, sb. pl. Sc. Nhb. Dur. Cum. Wm. Yks. Lan. Chs. [ka'rlinz, ke'rlinz, käl'inz.]

1. Grey or brown peas prepared and eaten on Passion Sunday (the fifth Sunday in Lent). Cf. carl, v.

Sc. Will feast in the heart of the ha', ON sybows, and rifarts and carlings, RAMSAY Tea-table Misc. (1724) l. 86, ed. 1871. n.Cy. Formerly doles of carlings were made to the poor, HENDERSON Flk-Lore (1879) ii; N.Cy.¹ Nhb. They are called carlings, probably a corruption of carings, BRAND Pop. Antiq. (1777) 325; Tid. Mid. Misera, Carlin, Palm, Pace egg day, Old Rime (J.Ar.); Nhb.¹ Choice grey-peas, of the preceding autumn, steeped in spring water for twelve or fifteen hours, till they are soaked or macerated; then laid on a sieve, in the open air, that they may be externally dry. Thus swelled, and enlarged to a considerable size, and on the verge of vegetating, they are put in an iron pot, or otherwise, on a slow fire, and kept stirring. They will then parch, crack, and, as we provincially call it, bristle: when they begin to burst, they are ready to eat, Genl. Mag. (1788). A tradition associates this custom with a commemoration of the disciples plucking the ears of corn on the Sabbath day. Another associates it with a famine in Newcastle, which was relieved by the arrival of a ship in the Tyne loaded with a cargo of grey peas. The remembrance of their deliverance was thenceforth proclaimed by the people in observing a feast of carlins on the second Sunday before Easter. Large peas of a brownish yellow spotted colour, called 'brandlings,' are quite different from the ordinary grey pea, and are much fancied and in request for carlins. *Dur.*¹ *e.Dur.*¹ Carlin's cooked in melted butter. Lakel. It was a very common custom for boys and others to carry their carlings in their pockets and salute each other in the house or upon the roads with a handful of them, ELLWOOD (1895). Cum. Here the peas are more commonly eaten without any preparation, and the young people are also in the habit of filling their pockets with them, sallying forth into the street, and, in fashion of less sombre carnival, saluting the passers by, particularly their own friends, with a handful, FERGUSON Northmen (1856) 208; *Cum.*¹ *n.Yks.*¹ A name formerly, if not still, employed, at least occasionally, to designate the peas thus called, was Little godmothers; n.Yks.^{2,3} *ne.Yks.*¹ The custom has nearly died out. *e.Yks.*¹, *m.Yks.*¹, *w.Yks.*² Lan. Various viands appropriated to special occasions, as . . . carlins, . . . to Mid-Lent⁴ Sunday, HARLAND & WILKINSON Flk-Lore (1867) 258; *Lan.*¹, Chs.^{1,2,3}

RAY (1691); (K.); GROSE (1790); Chs.¹ The general system of butter making is to collect the milk or cream in a deep earthenware pan called a steen. When sufficient is collected for a churning, the steen is brought to the fire, and remains there till the milk thickens and becomes curdy; it is kept covered up, and is occasionally stirred round with a wooden stick, and the steen also is occasionally turned round to prevent the milk becoming unequally warm. This is called carving the milk, and when sufficiently curdled the milk is said to be carved; Chs.²⁸ s.Chs.¹ Taak¹ th kree'üm mûg of dhû aa'rth üz sóon üz ev'ür it's ky'aa'rvd [Tak th' cream-mug off the hearth as soon as ever it's carved]. nw.Der.¹ Shr.¹ Are you going to churn to-day?—No, Ma'am, the milk i' this stane inna ready, it's too thin—it hanna [kaa'r'd] a bit.

(2, a) Abd. A famous resort for the 'Cattie an' Doggie'—A game quite familiar to every young rogie, Ogg Willie Waly (1873) 76. Ag., Lth. Three play at this game, who are provided with clubs. They cut out two holes, each about 1 ft. in diameter, and 7 ins. in depth, with a distance between them of about 26 ft. One stands at each hole, with a club, called a 'dog,' and a piece of wood of about 4 ins. long and 1 in. in diameter, called a 'cat,' is thrown from the one hole towards the other, by a third person. The object is to prevent the cat getting into the hole (JAM.). (b) *Shr.*² Somewhat resembles trap-ball, the ball being substituted by a piece of wood . . . of box or yew, and when laid on the ground and smartly struck at either end, it will rise high enough for the striker to hit it away from him as it descends. The 'dog' is the stick with which it is struck. (3) *Bnff.*¹ (4) Dor. (C.W.) (5) Ess. (W.W.S.) (6) Sc. If seven boys are to play, six holes are made. Each stands at a hole, with a short stick, the seventh stands at a short distance, holding a ball. When he gives the word . . . all the six must change holes, each running . . . and putting his stick in the hole, which he has newly seized. . . . The boy who has the ball tries to put it into an empty hole. If he succeeds, the boy who had not the stick (which is called the cat) in the hole to which he had run, is put out and must take the ball (JAM.). (7) Rxb. In the town of Kelso . . . there is a meeting once a year . . . for the purpose of viewing the merriment of a 'cat in barrel' . . . The cat is put into a barrel partly stuffed with soot, and then hung up between two high poles upon a cross-beam; . . . the barrel, after many a frantic blow, being broken, the wretched animal makes her reluctant appearance amidst a great concourse of spectators, who . . . terminate her life and misery by barbarous cruelty, LAZARUS Kelso (1789) 144, in *BRAND Pop. w.Yks. In the Chartist days the conspirators provided themselves with iron cats, so made of four spikes that, however thrown, they stood on three, the fourth projecting upwards, Sheffield Indep. (1874); w.Yks.²

8. A piece of wood used as a ball in various games.

Sc. (JAM.) Nhb.¹ Used in the boys' game of kitty-cat. War.³ Used in the game of 'tip-cat.' se.Wor.¹ Used in the game of 'bandy.' The cat is knocked with the bandy in opposite directions by the opposing players. Wil.¹ A game played with a wooden 'cat' instead of a ball (s. v. Cat-kidney). Dor. BARNES Gl. (1863). [Amer. Dial. Notes (1896) I. 414.]

9. The game of 'tip-cat.' See below.

Con. Cat is played with a stick four inches long, bevelled at each end, called the cat. This . . . stick is laid on the ground, and . . . hit with a stick to make it rise, . . . when it is hit by the player, who runs to a mark and back, Flk-Lore Jrn. (1884) II. 264. Yks. ib. 319. Lan. GASKELL Lectures Dial. (1854) 9. Glo. A short piece of wood shaped for the purpose, commonly much bigger in the middle than at the ends, which being raised by a touch or tap of the cat-stick at one of the ends, is stricken away, instead of a ball, to be caught by the adversary, GROSE (1790) MS. add. (H.)

10. A game played with a bat and 'cat,' somewhat resembling cricket.

Con. Three or more players on each side, two stones (or holes) defended by batsmen, one 'lobber' who throws ball (or stick). When the stick is hit the batsmen change places, Flk-Lore Jrn. (1884) II. 319. w.Yks. In Wilsden 'cat' is the name of the Huddersfield game of 'pig,' Leeds Merc. Suppl. (July 11, 1891); w.Yks.² Glo. GROSE (1790) MS. add. (H.) Hmp. There are two holes in the ground, 5 or 6 inches in diameter, and these are nearer to one another than the wickets in cricket. There is a thick piece of stick about 5 inches long called 'the cat'; instead of bats there are strong sticks. Bowling takes place from each end alternately, the object being to get the cat into the hole (W.H.E.).

11. The stick used in the game of 'cat in the hole' (q.v.); a light bat used in tossing or driving a ball; a stroke with the bat.

Sc. The boy who had not his stick (which is called the cat) in the hole to which he had run, is put out and must take the ball (s. v. Cat i' the hole) (JAM.); (JAM. Suppl.)

Hence Cat or Cath, v. to toss or drive by striking with the hand or a light club or bat. Sc. (JAM. Suppl.)

12. A soft cake made of clay, salt, meal, &c., employed to lure pigeons into a dove-cote; gen. called salt-cat.

n.Lin.¹ The use of the cat is said to have been illegal. ne.Wor. (J.W.P.), e.An.¹, Nrf.¹ Sus., Hmp. HOLLOWAY.

13. A piece of soft clay mixed with straw, thrust in between the laths in building mud walls, &c., and afterwards daubed or plastered. Gen. in phr. cat and clay.

Sc. The houses were so slightly built with cat and clay, Fountainhall (1759) I. 380 (JAM.); A claurt o' caul comfortless purtatoes whilk cling to ane's ribs like as muckle cat and clay, Blackw. Mag. (Nov. 1820) 154 (ib.). Ant. HUME Dial. 34. s.Don. SIMMONS Gl. (1890). N.Cy.¹, Nhb.¹

Hence (1) Catter, sb. Obs., a plasterer; (2) to cat a chimney, phr. to close a vent by the process of cat and clay.

(1) Nhb.¹ The fraternity of plasterers in Newcastle were anciently styled 'catters and daubers,' BRAND Hist. Newc. II. 268. (2) Sc. (JAM.)

14. A ball made by mixing coal and clay together, used as fuel.

N.Cy.¹ Nhb. I well remember sitting opposite Molly in the kitchen,—watching the red glow of the burning 'cats' in the whitewashed fireplace, Tynedale Stud. (1896) iv; Nhb.¹ The 'Crow coal' burns with a fetid smell. To prevent the discomfort thereby occasioned, cats are used in the domestic hearth. Placed in a peat fire they soon become incandescent, producing a hot, lasting glow. Sometimes called clay-cats.

15. A chump of clay stone.

Dor. BARNES Gl. (1863).

16. A handful of straw or of reaped grain laid on the ground without being put into a sheaf.

Rxb., Dmf. A reaper having cut down as much corn as can be held in the hand, lays this handful down till one or more be added to it. What is thus laid down is called a cat (JAM.). Rxb. Now some mak bands, some cast in cats, A. SCOTT Poems (1808) 104.

17. A small piece of rag, rolled up and put between the handle of a pot and the hook which suspends it over the fire, to raise it a little. Rxb. (JAM.)

18. A quart pewter pot.

Lon. slang. At this lodging-house cats and kittens are melted down, sometimes twenty a day. A quart pot is a cat, and pints and half-pints are kittens, MAYHEW Lon. Labour (1851) I. 414.

CAT, *sb.*² Nhb. Also Ken.

1. Obs. A large unwieldy vessel or collier.

n.Cy. GROSE (1790) MS. add. (H.) Nhb. Catt or bark, from the coal trade, of 350 tons, estimated at about £2,000, FRANKLIN Wks. (1771) II. 406.

Hence Cat-built, phl. adj. built on the old style of ship-building.

Nhb.¹ The stern was much narrowed, and the planking swept up in an elliptical fashion, giving a barrel-shaped appearance. The 'tumble in' was so considerable that a man could stand on the side and paint the bulwark. The last of the old cat-built ships is said to have been wrecked about 1850.

2. A row-boat with a single mast and lug-sail.

Ken. It's only a little Deal-cat (D.W.L.); Still in use, esp. at Deal. It is similar to a second-class lugger, without a 'fore-peak,' and not carrying a 'cock-tail,' i. e. a small row-boat carried by luggers. It is becoming rare, like the lugger itself (E.R.O.).

CATTERN, sb. Wor. Shr. (?) Bck. Sus. Wil. [kæ'tən.] St. Catherine's Day, Nov. 25, on which it is customary for children to go round begging for apples and beer. See also Clement.

Wor. Until within a very recent period it was the custom of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester, yearly, on St. Catharine's Day, being the last day of their annual audit, to distribute amongst the inhabitants of the college precincts, a rich compound of wine, spices, &c., which was especially prepared for the occasion, and called the Cattern or Catharine bowl, BRAND Pop. Antiq. (ed.

1849) I. 413. n.Wor. The custom of begging is still kept up, the verses sung being as follows:—Catten and Clemen come year by year; Some of your apples and some of your beer! Some for Peter, some for Paul, Some for Him as made us all. Clement was a good old man, For his sake give us some. Plum, plum, cherry, cherry, Give us good ale to make us merry, Apples to roast and nuts to crack, And a barrel of cider on the tap. Up the ladder and down the can, Give us a red apple and we'll be gone (J.W.P.). Shr. NORTHALL Flk-Rhymes (1892) 226. Bck. On Cattern Day [lace makers] hold merry-makings, and eat a sort of cakes they call 'wigs' and drink ale. The tradition says it is in remembrance of a Queen Catharine, who, when the trade was dull, burnt all her lace, and ordered new to be made, N. & Q. (1862) 3rd S. i. 387. Sus. Cattern' and Clemen' be here, here, here, Give us your apples and give us your beer, Flk-Lore Jrn. (1884) II. 327.

Hence (1) Catterning or Cattering, vbl. sb. going round begging for apples and beer on St. Catherine's Day; (2) Cattern-tide, sb. the feast of St. Catherine.

(1) Wor. A custom, called going 'a catterring' from St. Catharine, in honour of whom, and of St. Clement, it originated. . . . There were set verses for the occasion, BRAND Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1849) I. 412. w.Wor.¹ Sus. The children in some parts of e.Sus. still keep up the custom of Catterning and Clemmning, Flk-Lore Jrn. (1884) II. 326; Sus.¹ (2) Wil. (G.E.D.)

2. A raised road across a moor or boggy land.

Nhb.¹ Spec. applied to the remains of Roman paved roads, which are popularly ascribed to supernatural agency, as 'Cob's Causey,' or 'Devil's Causey,' a branch from the Watling Street striking off north of the Wall. Yks. Used gen., but perhaps most frequently in the flat districts, where its necessity was first felt and has most palpably continued, Yks. Wkly. Post (1883). n.Yka. The formal or more elaborate 'high-way' of the times was the flagged causeway, pannier-man's causey or 'horse-road,' ATKINSON Whitby (1894) 182; n.Yka.¹ Many of these [roads] have been worn out and never replaced, or have been taken up, and others are nearly or quite overgrown by the ling and other moor-herbage, so that it is only by the revelations afforded by a moor-track, or a moor-current in wet weather, that their position and general direction can be ascertained. e.Yka.¹ A raised and paved way across a fold-yard. e.Lan.¹

Chs.¹ A paved road, of which there are still a good many, is always spoken of as 'the causey.' I can recollect the whole length of road between Mobberley and Knutsford being paved with round cobbles, the side roads which branched off being merely sandy ruts. When anyone asked the way to Knutsford, he was pretty sure to be told 'Yo mun keep to th' causey, an' yo'n be reet,' n.Lin.¹ Made by raising a bank above the level of the water as it stands in flood time. Shr.¹ Paths or roads between the beds from which the peat, or 'turf,' is cut up Whixall Moss. Oxf. Causey . . . commonly taken with us for a high-way, or bank raised in marshy ground for foot-passage, tho' even sometimes the ways for horse-passage are also known by this name, such as that beyond Fryer Bacon's Study by Oxford (to S. 6. A boys' game similar to prisoner's base.

Yks. N. & Q. (1888) 7th S. vi. 497. Wor. (J.B.P.) Brks. The players are divided into two parties. One end of the playing ground is marked off by a straight line drawn across, and the piece thus marked off is divided by a second line, drawn from the first and at right angles to it, into two 'homes'—one for A, and one for B. At the opposite end of the ground are the two 'prisons,' A's prison being opposite to B's home, and B's prison opposite to A's home. In each prison there is a 'base,' which is something fixed, such as a tree. Any player who has left his home, whether by running out in front or by going into the home of the other side, if he be touched by one of the opposite party before he regain his home, must go to prison. In order to rescue a prisoner a player must run from the home to the prison and touch his prisoner, without having first been touched himself by any one of the opposite side (W.H.E.). Ken. Let's have a game of chivy (H.M.).

A woman who has not changed her name in marriage can cure it by simply giving the patient something to eat. The hair of a donkey's cross, i.e. the dark line upon its shoulders, is another very popular remedy. It is administered in two ways. A small portion of the hair is chopped up very small and placed between bread and butter and is given to the child to eat; or the hair is sewed up in a strip of flannel, and is worn round the throat. The mountain ash also figures as a remedy for chin-cough. A certain mountain ash grew in my garden at Mobberley; . . . the tree was well known in the neighbourhood and was used as a cure for the whooping cough. A small lock of hair from the head of the patient was brought or sent to one of my men-servants, who thereupon bored a hole in the tree, placed the hair in the hole, and fastened it in with a plug; Chs.² We have several curious recipes for it—roast hedgehog, fried mice, &c. Another is holding a toad to the mouth, which is supposed to extract the cough from the patient. This, however, does not seem infallible, as an old woman complained that 'her boy could not get shut of the chin-cough, though he had sucked two toads to death.' s.Cha.¹ Ching-kof. Stf. Find a briar growing in the ground at both ends, pass the child under and over it nine times, for three mornings, before sunrise, repeating: 'Under the briar, and over the briar, I wish to leave the chincough here.' The briar must be cut, and made into the form of a cross, and worn on the breast, POOLE Customs, 37, in NORTHALL Gl.; Stf.¹ nw.Der.¹, Not.² Lin. Tussis sicca et vehemens pueris frequens, SKINNER (1671). n.Lin.¹, Lel.¹, Nbp.¹, War.², w.Wor.¹ Shr. At Whittington . . . the remedy is to pass the child three times under and three times over a briar which simply grows out from the hedge, saying meanwhile, 'Over the briar, and under the briar, and out goes the chin-cough.' . . . Usually a briar of which the root grows in one parish, while the end hangs over into another, is prescribed. If the further end have rooted, so much the better. . . . At Market Drayton, which stands close to the boundaries of Shr., Stf., and Chs., a bramble which grows in three counties is required. Chs. Science Gossip (1865) 36; Chs.¹³

5. The last handful of corn to be cut at harvest, of which the stalks are roughly plaited together.

Ant. The reapers throw their hooks at the plaited stalks till some one cuts it, which is cutting the churn. The reaping is then over and the churn is won. 'Hae you won the churn?' 'We won the churn last night,' are well-known local phrases over a wide district. Long ago, before tea was introduced, the farmer when the harvest was completed placed the churn, with thickened milk and cream on top ready for churning, in the centre of the floor, and the reapers sat round dipping in their mugs or other vessels and partaking of the 'cream,' as it was called, to cakes of oaten bread. Hence 'winning the churn.' The churn (that is, the plaited stalks) is placed above the door in the kitchen or over the chimney hob for good luck and a charm against witchcraft, &c. (W.J.K.)

6. A harvest home.

(1) n.Cy. Churn-getting, GROSE (1790). Lan. A company of haymakers, on their way home from a 'churn-gettin'—as the hay-harvest supper is called—came up the road, WAUGH Ben an Bantam (1866) vi; Lan.¹ (2) n.Cy.¹, Nhb.¹ Yks. The churn-supper was always provided when all was shorn. It was [so] called because, from immemorial times, it was customary to produce in a churn a great quantity of cream, and to circulate it by dishfuls to each of the rustic company, who ate it with bread. Though this custom has been disused in many places, yet it survives still about Whitby and Scarborough in the east, and round about Guisburn, &c., in Craven, in the west, HONE Year Bk. (ed. 1841) col. 1067. w.Yks. DIXON Sngs. Eng. Peas. (1857) 162; w.Yks.¹ Lan. 1. sb. In comp. (1) Cinder-bed, a layer in the middle of the Purbeck beds; (2) -coal, coal deprived of its bitumen by the action of a whin-dyke or slip; (3) -hills, deposits of scoriae or slag from ancient iron furnaces; (4) -pit, the ash-pit; (5) -slip, cinder refuse; (6) -tea, sweetened water into which hot cinders are dropped, given to infants as a cure for colic; (7) -wig, an opprobrious epithet bestowed upon an ill-natured, niggardly person.

(1) Dor. The cinder bed is almost entirely composed of shells of Ostrea distorta, WOODWARD Geol. Eng. and Wales (1876) 205. (2) Nhb., Dnr. GREENWELL Coal Tr. Gl. (1849); Nhb.¹ (3) n.Yks.¹

Of very frequent occurrence in most parts of Cleveland. It would appear that the deposits of slag referred to in the definition are of remote antiquity, and that the name cinder-hills has been attached to them time out of mind. In many instances the position of the cinder-hills is such that the stone must have been brought to these furnaces, from which they are the residuum, from some considerable distance. (4) e.An.¹ (5) w.Yks. BAINES Yks. Past (1870) 236. (6) w.Yks. He nivver roused th' haase up at neet, to get him cinder teah when he'd th' belly wark, HARTLEY Clock Alm. (1887) 51; After that, if av ailed owt aw'd awther to tak cinder teah or goa baahit fissick, *Leeds Merc. Come, keep thi clatch-hooks off me, wilt ta. A fissure in the rock on the face of Helsby Hill is also so called. There was, formerly, a gibbet at this spot, where criminals were hung in chains. There is probably, therefore, some connexion between the primary meaning of the word claws, talons, and the name of the Helsby fissure, because it was there the hangman got the condemned man in his clutches. It is just possible, however, that clatch-hooks may be an old name for some portion of the apparatus connected with executions, and that claws or talons may be the secondary meaning.

CLATE, see Clat, Cleat.

CLATENS, sb. Wor. Also written Clayton's. [klē-tənz.] Stale news, 'chestnuts.' Cf. Miles' news.

CLAVIE, sb. Sc. [klēvi.] In connexion with the ceremony of 'burning the clavie,' see below.

Elg. A superstitious ceremony is annually observed on New Year's Eve at the fishing village of Burghhead on the Moray Frith, with the view of securing a good season's fishing. The clavie consists of a tar barrel, within which a fir prop about 4 ft. in length is fixed, surmounted by the staves of a herring cask (JAM. Suppl.); The ancient custom of burning the 'clavie,' or ridding the town of witches, was celebrated on 'Auld Yule E'en.' Throughout the evening the building of the crucible was going on, and by six o'clock, the hour for setting the material alight, everything was in readiness. The fire was lit, and the usual circle march was commenced. After parading round the fish-curing yards and through the main streets, the 'clavie,' accompanied by a large crowd of both old and young, was carried to the Doorie Hill, where the remains of the burning mass were duly deposited on the stone receptacle built for the purpose. There it was allowed to burn nearly down, after which the stack was sold to one of the hotel-keepers. The proceeds were disbursed in a 'wee drap.' The custom of burning the 'clavie' is nowadays almost extinct, apart from its celebration at Burghhead, and, it is said, at a small village in Wales, Aberdeen Wkly. Free Press (Jan. 16, 1897).

3. In phr. (1) Drowin o' cloam, the custom of throwing broken crockery-ware at the doors of, or inside, houses on the night before Shrove Tuesday; (2) to empty cloam, (3) to lift cloam, to drink.

(1) w.Som.¹ A very curious old custom, of the nature of a practical joke, is observed in the Hill district. On the night before Shrove Tuesday, if the backdoor or any outer door of the Parsonage or a farm-house be left unfastened, it is quietly opened, and before any one can stir to prevent it, a whole sack-full of broken bits of crockery is suddenly shot out in the middle of the kitchen, or wherever the bearer can penetrate before he is observed. He then decamps and disappears in the darkness, generally unrecognized. People are of course apt to forget the custom at the right moment, and so have their houses half filled with rubbish which it must have taken much pains to collect, and prepare secretly, beforehand. I have failed to discover either the origin or meaning of this custom, called 'drowin o' cloam'; but it is evidently allied to one practised in this neighbourhood on the same night—that of throwing a handful of stones at the door. . . . The custom of throwing old clome on the Monday night before Shrove Tuesday is still continued in Hawkridge. The words they say when it is thrown at the door or inside the house are—'Tipety, Tipety Tin, give me a pancake, And I will come in; Tipety, Tipety Toe, give me a pancake, And I will go.' The young men that are in the house (if there are any) rush out and try to collar the invaders, and if they are successful in their catch, they bring the prey inside and black his face with soot. After that they give him a pancake. nw.Dev.¹ In the evening of Pancake Day the boys go about the village throwing sherds at the doors and singing in a monotonous drawl the rhyme—'Flish, flash; flish, flash; Watter, watter, ling. Hev ee any pancakes? Plaize vor let us in. Hev ee any best beer? Hev ee any small? Plaize vor gee us zomthin' Or nothin' at all.' Of course the object of the boys is to get something given to them—pancakes, beer, or money. (2) w.Som.¹ Tūe'vau'n u ai'mteen u floam [too fond of emptying o' cloam]. Cor. Chs.¹ They are worn very generally by the factory hands of both sexes, and the clattering noise made by two or three hundred people when they loose from the mill and run through the streets is very peculiar. In Macclesfield it is only the cotton hands who wear them. The sole of a clog is about an inch thick; a groove is cut entirely round it, and in this the upper leather is nailed. It is then tipped underneath with iron and has an iron heel, and it becomes a most formidable weapon for 'punning' in a Lan. 'up and down' fight. Clogs are generally made considerably too large, and a wisp of straw or hay is placed under the sole of the foot. They are tied with a thong, or frequently have brass clasps; they are warm and comfortable, and are almost impervious to wet. The cutting of clog soles is quite a special branch of industry; Chs.³, nw.Der.¹, n.Lin.¹, War. (J.R.W.), War.³, Shr.¹ Glo. BAYLIS Illus. Dial. (1870).

CLORACH, v. and sb. Sc. Also in forms clairach, cleurach Bnff.¹ [klōrəx.]

1. v. To do any kind of work such as cooking, washing, &c., in a dirty, awkward manner. Cf. glare.

Bnff.¹ The dehm wiz clorachin', an' mackin' pottit behd. There is a slight difference of meaning in the two words, 'cleurach' and 'clorach,' 'cleurach' expressing a greater degree of disgust, accompanied by impatience. 'Clairach' expresses a higher degree of disgust than 'clorach' and 'cleurach.' The word 'clorach' in all its meanings and forms indicates disgust, and often contempt.

Hence (1) Clorachan, vbl. sb. the act of doing a piece of work in a dirty manner; (2) Cloraching, phl. adj. lazy and dirty at work.

(1) Bnff.¹ Sic a clorachan's she's haudin' wee that dainner o' hers. (2) ib.

Snags.* (1818) 18; Nhb.¹ The coble is built with a very deep cutwater; but towards the stern, which is square, it is made with a widening flat bottom. It is thus a boat without a 'keel,' but the flat bottom has two bilge clogs, called a 'skirval.' As the after-part draws only a few inches, the rudder is carried down much below the level of the bottom. These peculiarities necessitate the coble to be towed stern foremost, or, when landed, to be in like manner turned stern to the beach, and at the same time the rudder has to be unshipped. Dur. They're forc'd to take a coble, and come in by the sea, Bishoprick Gart. (1834) 52. n.Yks.^{1,2} Used also as a pleasure-boat. ne.Yks.¹, w.Yks.⁵, e.An.¹, Nrf.¹

7. To mount a culprit on the back of another, in order to flog him.

Sc. (JAM.); MACKAY; Old Scottish schoolmasters chastised idle and refractory schoolboys on the seat of honour, and in order to a convenient flagellation thereon, they mounted the offender on the back of another. . . . The culprit was then said to 'cock' . . . The offending youth . . . commonly sought to conceal himself. . . . The schoolmaster on these occasions of flight, caused all the boys in the school to search for the fugitive; hence the origin of 'Cock hoddin,' the cock in hiding, or 'Cock's-Odin' (q.v.), N. & Q. (1868) 4th S. ii. 165.

Hence (1) Cock-a-linty, adv. carelessly balanced on the shoulders; (2) — 's headling, phr. a boys' game in which one mounts on another's shoulders; (3) To ride cock-a-legs, (4) — cockawinie, (5) — cockstride, (6) — cocky-neck, phr. to ride on the shoulders of another; (7) To get or sit a-cock, phr. to sit or ride astride on the top of anything.

Wm. My grandy's seeke And like to dee, And I'll make her Some cocklety bread, &c., BRAND Pop. Ant. (ed. 1849) II. 414. n.Yks.² The term Cocklety is heard among our children at play. One of them squats on its haunches with the hands joined beneath the thighs, and being lifted by a couple of others who have hold by the bowed arms, it is swung forwards and backwards and bumped on the ground or against the wall, while continuing the words 'this is the way we make cocklety bread.' e.Yks.¹ This term is quite obs. except in the well-known rhyme, used in a girls' game. A girl sits on two clasped hands of two other girls, the other united hands supporting her back, and is swung to and fro, the rhyme being repeated by the swingers, MS. add. (T.H.) w.Yks. The moulding cocklety bread is a sport among hoydenish girls not quite extinct. It consists in sitting on the ground, raising the knees and clasping them with the hands; and then using an undulatory motion as if they were kneading dough, accompanying the motion with a chant, of which the following are the words:—'My granny is sick, and now is dead, And we'll go mould some cocklety bread; Up with the heels and down with the head, And that is the way to make cocklety bread.' Dough, thus moulded, when baked was given as a love charm, Sheffield Indep. (1874); w.Yks.² n.Lin.¹ The children turn head-over-heels after repeating the third line. Oxf. The maids when they have put themselves into the fit posture say thus—'My granny is sick and now is dead, We'll go mould some cockle-bread,' AUBREY Remains (1697) in Gomme Games (1894) 74. Wil. A wanton sport, which they call moulding of cockle-bread; they gett upon a table-board, and then gather-up their knees and their coats with their hands as high as they can, and then they wabble to and fro with their buttocks as if they were kneading of dough, ib. ['Mounting cockeldy bread' is a play among children in which one lies down on the floor on her back rolling backwards and forwards, and repeating 'Cockeldy bread, mistley cake, When you do that for our sake,' Times (1847) in BRAND l.c.]

COE, *sb.*¹ and v. Som. Dev. Also in form caw Dev. [kō, kō.]

1. sb. A disease of sheep, cattle, rabbits, &c.; the rot. See Coath, Coad.

w.Som.¹ The coe consists of the destruction of the substance of the liver by a living organism called a fluke. There are certain pastures which always produce this in the winter months, and so cannot be stocked with sheep. Dev.¹

Hence Coe-grass, sb. the toad-rush, Juncus bufonius, said to cause the rot in sheep and cattle.

w.Som.¹ By some this disease is said to come from the goose grass—Carex hirta; but both [J. bufonius and C. hirta] are generally found growing either together or in similar wet land.

2. v. To affect with disease; usually of sheep, rarely applied to persons.

Som. W. & J. Gl. (1873). w.Som.¹ Wet pastures are said to coe the sheep. I never heard of coe in horses or bullocks until 1884, when many bullocks were said to be coed by the unusually wet season. 'You can't never keep no sheep 'pon thick farm, 'thout you be a mind to coe every one o' m.' Dev. The sheep have been cawed, and I have done all I could to save them, BARING-GOULD *J. (1) Coffin-board, a stretching-board for a corpse; (2) -bone, the large bone of a horse's foot; (3) -cutter, a large, black insect, the cocktail, Ocypus olens; (4) -handle, a collection of tallow or stearine, which forms on the side of a candle which has been guttering; (5) -kist, a hearse; (6) -lead rings, see below.

(1) n.Yks. (I.W.) (2) n.Lin.¹ (3) N.I.¹ Called also the Devil's Coachman. (4) w.Som.¹ When the tallow or stearine of a candle runs down on one side it often projects and then reunites to the candle, forming a sort of loop; this is a coffin-handle, and is a 'sure sign of death' to the person in whose direction it forms itself. The same superstition holds when the grease merely forms a considerable projection; it is then a 'winding-sheet,' and being commoner is not so much dreaded as a coffin-handle. I have seen people turn a candle when it seemed inclined to form a winding-sheet in their direction. (5) Nhb. That sic unseetly coffin-kists Sud niver run doon gigin', WILSON Captains (1843) 112. COGGESHALL JOB, phr. Ess. A stupid piece of work; a foolish action.

The prov. stupidity of the people of Coggeshall is the subject of many stories. Tradition says that when they had built their church, they found that they had forgotten to make any windows. So they got some hampers, and set them open in the sun to catch the light, shut them up tight, and took them into the church on wheelbarrows, and there opened them to let the light out. Another legend says that the people thought that their church was in the wrong place. In order to move it, they went to one end to push it, laying their coats down on the ground, outside the opposite end, on the spot to which the wall was to be removed. When they judged that they had moved the building far enough, they went round to find their coats, but none were to be found. Then they said that no doubt they had pushed the wall over them, so they went to look inside the church, but alas! they were not there. The Coggeshall men were short of stature, and on one occasion in hay-time it happened that the handles of their hayforks were all too long for them. What should they do? Of course if the handles were too short, it would be very easy to join a piece on to them; but what to do with these they knew not. It is related of these people that they put up hurdles to keep the floods out (S.P.H.).

12. To make a new-comer pay his footing.

new tenants are colted the first time they appear at the rent dinner. On the Moberley Hall Estate, where I have received the rents for many years, and probably at other rent dinners, a curious formula is practised. After dinner two of the oldest tenants mysteriously leave their seats and go out of the room. They presently return bringing with them a carving knife, a rolling pin, and a small tea tray. They then go round the room looking the guests over till they find a new tenant; then begins the fun. They treat him as if he were a colt that is going to have his tail docked. They pat him on the back and shout wo-ho! wo-ho! and ask one another 'How will he stand it?' 'Dun yo think he'll bleed pretty well?' and so on. After a few of these jokes and by-play, and a good deal of laughing, the carving knife and the rolling pin are struck smartly together behind the man's back, which represents the docking of his tail, and the tray is presented to him, on which he is expected to deposit a piece of money, which is afterwards spent in punch. All the new people have to pass through the ordeal until there are no more colts. Nhp.² The ceremony consists in holding up his leg and striking the sole of his foot with a board. Glo.¹ He is colted. Bdf. BATCHELOR Anal. Eng. Lang. (1809).

1. sb. In comb. (1) Comb-and-brush, the wild teasel, Dipsacus sylvestris; (2) -broach or -broitch, (a) the long, sharp tooth of a wool-comb; (b) a spit; (c) a knitting-needle; (3) -cardins, wool once carded; (4) -cards, the first and coarsest cards used in carding wool; (5) -plates, a kind of steel comb used for cleaning the iron cards of a scribbling machine; (6) -pot, a home-made pot or circular clay stove used by wool-combers for heating their combs; (7) -pot plate, an iron plate forming the top of the comb-pot (q.v.); (8) -pot top, a movable cap or top for the comb-pot; (9) -stock, a rough wooden bench on which the raw wool was 'made up' or prepared for the combs; (10) -washings, the last drainings of the honey-comb.

(1) Wil. 'Comb and Brush' suits the Teasel well, Sarum Dioc. Gazette (Jan. 1890) 6, col. 1; Wil.¹ (2) a w.Yks. Gen. made of the very best metal, as they had to bear great strain in drawing out the matted wool fibres (J.T.); Obsol., Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Jan. 3, 1891). e.Lan.¹ Som. W. & J. Gl. (1873). w.Som.¹ Until about twenty years ago this branch of manufacture was performed by hand, each comb using a pair of combs, made of three or four rows of long, sharp-pointed steel broaches. Only the long-stapled or combing fibres are treated thus; the short wools are carded. (b, c) Som. W. & J. Gl. (1873). (3, 4) Cum.¹ (5) w.Yks. (J.M.). (6) w.Yks. Gen. made of firebricks and clay, and was from two ft. six ins. to three ft. six ins. in diameter (J.T.); Obsol., Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Jan. 3, 1891). w.Som.¹ The process of combing wool by hand is now nearly, if not quite, obs. (7) w.Yks. Between this plate and the cover, the combs were heated (E.W.). (8) ib. (9) w.Yks. (E.G.); (J.T.). (10) Dor. Honey sells well, and we ourselves can make shift with a drop o' small mead and metheglin for common use from the comb-washings, HARDY Wess. Tales (1888) I. 24.

2. In phr. (1) to bring an ill comb to the head, Prov., to do oneself mischief; (2) to cut the comb, to humiliate, 'take down a peg'; (3) to raddle the comb, to become flushed or excited from drink, &c.

(1) Tev. Ye hae brocht an ill kaim to your head (JAM.). (2) w.Som.¹ He's to big vor his clothes, by half; he wants vor to have his comb a-cut vor'n. Slang. It is necessary to cut the combs of these landlords a bit, SMART Master of Rathkelly (1888) II. i. (3) Shr.¹ I should think yo'n bin 'avin' a spot o' rum i' yore tay, yo'n raddled yore cõom.

3. An instrument used by thatchers to beat down the straw and then smooth it afterwards. Ken.¹, Sus.¹

4. The raised part of a 'helmet' hat, such as is worn by policemen. Chs.¹

5. The furrow slice or strip of ground turned up by the plough.

Hrt. Plowing the land across in hacks or combs, ELLIS Mod. Husb. (1750) IV. i. Suf. (F.H.), w.Som.¹ In trenching or digging soil before winter, or in ploughing land for a fallow, a good workman tries to leave the sods as rough and uneven as possible, so as to allow the frost the better to penetrate and pulverize the surface. This is called leaving 'a good comb upon it.' So also in plastering a ceiling, it is desirable that the mortar should penetrate well between the laths, so as to leave as rough a surface as possible above them. This is called making a good comb. Cor. The gruter Would hardly turn the coam, THOMAS Randigal Rhymes (1895) 26; Cor.²

Hence (1) Combing, vbl. sb. a shallow kind of ploughing; (2) Combing-sull, sb. a plough made with two 'broad-sides,' so arranged as to throw up a 'comb' or ridge on each side; (3) Comb-vore, sb. a furrow; see below.

(1) Hrt. Made by the plough's being drawn forward and backward (somewhat closely), ELLIS Mod. Husb. (1750). Cor.² (2) w.Som.¹ Koam'een zoo'ul. Called also a 'Taty-zull,' and in some districts a ridging-plough. Much used for earthing up potatoes. (3) Dev. The comb vore is the last solid one, and is gen. much smaller than any of the preceding ones. The comb vore and all vore are both ploughed the same way, not in opposite directions. The comb vore, or furrow, is a shallow one ploughed in the same direction, and next before the deeper all vore, in ploughing which latter the soil is turned up upon the smaller one, so as to make a good comb or ridge to the 'bat,' Reports Provinc. (1895).

6. An unturned ridge or balk left in ploughing.

Som. Reports Agric. (1793-1813) 158. Dev.¹ Cor. Land broken for wheat is . . . ploughed so as to leave here and there . . . a very narrow rib called a comb, QUILLER-COUCH Hist. Polperro (1871); Cor.¹

7. A crest, ridge of a hill; a ridge or elongated mound of gravelly matter more or less irregular in shape. See *Cam, sb.*¹

Sh.I. Kamb is applied to a hill or ridge of hills, rising like a crest, a hill with a long-shaped narrow top, JAKOBSEN Dial. (1897) 77; Kaim is a name gen. given to a ridge of high hills, EDMONSTON Zeland (1809) I. 139 (JAM.). Ayr., Lnk. (ib.) N.Cy.¹ Nhb. It is this which gives a billowy appearance to the valley . . . resembling the kaims or eskers of the coast, WILSON Eglingtonham (1886) 42; Nhb.¹

11. The line or edge where the upright bank of a hedge ends, and the top begins.

w.Som.¹ The fences mostly consist of high banks with bushes and brambles growing on them. A great deal of the hedger's art consists in setting up the bank so as to keep this line well defined—to make a geod koam tûe un [to it]. In all boundary hedges, the owner's exact bounds extend by custom to dree vèot' oa'f dhu koam u dhu aj [three feet off the comb of the hedge]; that is, to a line plumb down from three feet off the top outer edge of the bank. Dev. It is often a matter of discussion where this comb is precisely situated; but it is gen. considered to be an imaginary line on the top of the slope of the bank—by no means the centre of the hedge—many of which are double, and all have a comb on each side, Reports Provinc. (1895); Not a hound has touched the comb of that hedge, Memoir Russell (1883) xi.

12. The ridge of a roof.

w.Som.¹ Called also the koam u dh-aew'z [comb of the house]. Very common. Dev. Reports Provinc. (1895).
